Central Intelligence Agency

25X1

Washington, D. C. 20505

DIRECTORATE OF INTELLIGENCE

28 December 1984

South Korea: Retreat on Campus Liberalization Program

Summary

Seoul's retreat from its campus autonomy policy, viewed by many South Koreans as the litmus of Chun's commitment to "democratization," has set back the near-term prospects for political reform.

Blue House thinking on the proper response to continuing campus unrest is in flux, but Seoul does not appear inclined to make the political concessions that could forestall an escalation of	OEV1
campus tensions. We believe that chances are better	25 X 1 than even that shortly after (or possibly even before) National Assembly elections in mid-February, Seoul will further tighten political controls on student protest leaders and other critics. This will further erode public confidence in Chun's promise to oversee a peaceful transfer of power in 1988.	25 X 1

"Campus Autonomy" Policy Fails

Seoul's decision in November to reclaim the right to use riot police on campus rather than allowing the universities to make that decision themselves was driven, in our view, by a growing awareness among Chun's advisers that its eight-month experiment with leniency had failed to achieve its original objectives:

	ion, Office of East Asian		25X1
Comments and queries Korea Branch	e as of 25 December was in are welcome and may be ad	corporated. Idressed to Chief,	25 X 1
		EA M 84-10218	25X1 25X1
	Release 2011/08/17 : CIA-RDP85T002	20770040044770000	. 25 X 1

		25 X 1
	The violent tactics of the most radical students had not discredited them in the eyes of most university students as the authorities had expected.	25 X 1
	The universities were unable or unwilling to discipline student agitators.
	Most Koreans still viewed the continuing campus unrest as a failure of government policy.	25X1
h	Off-campus demonstrations during the past several months at imes have involved more than a thousand students. Protestors ave been increasingly willing to employ violence, including	25X1
D S	urning police vehicles, conducting hit-and-run attacks on police ubstations and ruling party offices, and detaining and forcibly nterrogating suspected police informants.	25X1
c 1 s S p	The boycott of mid-term exams at Seoul National University n late October the episode that brought the police back on ampus appeared to reflect student solidarity with protest eaders. Professors state that less than one-third of the tudents took exams. The strong support afforded the action by NU law students, who represent the most competitive and restigious department in South Korea, was particularly ignificant.	25X1 25X1
d	Protest organizers also appear to have reformulated their emands to broaden their appeal and to identify better with the oncerns of the South Korean majority:	. 23/1
	Assaults on the legitimacy of the Chun government have faded as a principal theme.
	Criticism of Chun's trip to Japan in early September was quickly dropped when this provoked little popular response.
	Student protests have increasingly highlighted press freedom and labor law reform, as well as such campus issues as elected student government.	25 X ′
	Student protestors for the first time have sought support for campus "democratization" from the opposition Democratic Korea Party (DKP).	25 X 1
•
		•

Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2011/08/17 : CIA-RDP85T00287R001001170002-2

The Government's Reassessment and Public	Reaction
	A Company of the Comp
the looser co	ontrols on dissident
activities this year have permitted activorganized, coordinate their actions more	ists to become bottom
Strengthen their ties with the labor move	ment and Chrictian alssident groups. Chun's crackdown may b	lava haan a naaction in part, to evidence that low-wage workers we student protestors as allies in their dem	vere beginning to view lands for labor law
reform and better working conditions.	30
In our judgment, the South Korean pu	blic believes campus
problems are chiefly the fault of ill-adv	ised government policies. The DKP's vigorous support for government, as well as its offer to help	in the legal defence of the leaders of the Sit-in at ruling narry	headquarters suggests that the opposition perceives widespread with the government's handling of the pro	hlem Most Koroans
- depite the escalating violence but hist	orically there has been deep attachment in Korea to the notion the country's "moral conscience." In add	ition with more than one-rourth of Korean youth now attending ;	higher learning institutions, many Korean families see the potentially affected by tougher government	emserves as at least t behavior toward
student protestors.	·
Press commentary has focussed on the	failure to devise a stability posed by radical activists under	han on the danger to impatience with Seoul's inability to solve	e the campus crisis.
Seoul, we believe, hopes that limited issue of student membership in freely form	concessions on the prevent a backlash against tougher handlir	ned associations will ng of dissident government plans to introduce some form of	tho
student government.	popularly elected
Chun's Perspective
	•
President Chun, nonetheless, appears concessions that would significantly expan	ld university salf mula
or moderate the treatment of protest leade	ers.
According to the US Embassy, Chun see	s political
"liberalization" as a means to achieve pol social harmony and has limited patience wi	itical crability and produce relatively prompt advances toward	thece pragmatic goals. The failure of the National Assemblegislation on elected student association	IV to draft compromise
a stated statement association	s before the close of

25X1

Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2011/08/17 : CIA-RDP85T00	287R001001170002-2 25X	1
the assembly session may be a further indicat unprepared to venture any bold steps at this	25X1 ion that Chun is time.
We believe that Chun is unlikely to take beginning with sanctioning elected student go necessary to persuade both the students and twill carry out meaningful political reforms o	vernment 25XI ne public that he	] tightening of tension and further confrontations are people in late February. We believe chances	s can prevent a new 25X° on when the schools are better than even	1 that Chun will significantly increase control expression within the next several months.  The Elections as Pressure Point	s on political 25X	1
The National Assembly elections in February even more resistant to moving forward on reformance opposition and dissident groups, including suppose the second secon	oms. A number of
Kim Young-sam and Kim Dae Jung, have formed a party, tentatively named the "New Korea Democration with strong anti-Chun precepts.	new opposition	1
The emergence of the NKDP has already trefrom the DKP, and the challenge posed by the pressure on the present opposition parties to	new party will put government more aggressively. The probable holdsident Kim Dae Jung will further complicate campaign. Kim, who has announced that he will January 31, may hope that his cause will becomissue as well as a rallying point for protest	the election 25X1 return around
Chun could move against student activists balloting despite the risk of a public backlas	before the recently formed a committee to oppose the dict defiance of government warnings aginst such ef Chun should wait until after the elections. a	ei University ions in direct forts. Even if crackdown on student activists after the elections, particugovernment fails to accompany such a move with freely formed student associations, will raise Koreans about Chun's commitment to broadening	larly if the some type of doubts among many participation before the end of his term in 19	88, when he has

_	Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2011/08/17 : CIA-RDP85T00287R001001170002-2
- 		25 X 1
	promised to step down. The government's policy toward student	25 X 1 unrest will probably likely to remain for most koncers a literus promised to step down. The government's policy toward student unrest will probably likely to remain for most Koreans a litmus of Chun's commitment to political reform, and we believe he will find it difficult to deal effectively with other political demands until the campus problem is resolved.
	of Chun's commitment to political reform, and we believe he will

25X1